

Micah and the Danities

Rev. Solomon Keal

Bryn Athyn Cathedral, February 12th, 2023

"So Micah said, 'You have taken away my gods which I made, and the priest, and you have gone away. Now what more do I have?'" (Judges 18:24)

The story of Micah and the Danites appears at the end of the book of Judges, at a time when things are somewhat chaotic for the children of Israel. It was a time in between the leadership of the judges and the leadership of the kings. "In those days there was no king in Israel; everyone did what was right in their own eyes" (Judges 17:6).

In that context, we find the character of Micah, living in the mountains of Ephraim. The name "Micah" in Hebrew means "Who is like God?" and I like to take that as a little bit of direction for how to understand this story. All the characters in the stories in the Word represent parts of us. But which characters best represent the qualities of God? Is it Micah's hospitality to the Levite? Is it Micah's mother's forgiveness of him? Is it the Levite, trying to be of service? Is it the Danites and their removal of Micah's idol?

Idolatry is something that the Lord warns us against (see Exodus 20:1-6). It's not that most of us are tempted to worship silver statues, but we can very often fall into the "idolatry" of making something in our life more important than living the life of love the Lord teaches us.

The Writings say that "idols" in the Word can represent either truths or falsities that we believe in:

"The teraphim were idols which were used when people consulted God or asked Him something. And because the replies which they received were to those people Divine truths, truths were therefore meant by them.... [In the opposite sense] 'the teraphim' stands for replies, but in that state iniquitous [immoral, false] ones. And because 'the teraphim' had this kind of meaning, some also had them in their houses, even though this was forbidden. One such person was Micah, in the Book of Judges." (Secrets of Heaven 4111:5-6)

The word "idol" is etymologically connected to the words "ideal" and "idea." All three words are related to the concept of having a "mental image" of something which could be either true or false. And the ways that we hold our “mental images” can either be healthy or unhealthy, useful or not useful. But whether they are true or not, useful or not, “idols” represent the things that we believe in, and put our faith in, and perhaps put up on pedestals. And amazingly, the Writings teach us that even ideas that are not completely true can still be connected to goodness:

“People who are governed by good yet possess unauthentic truths, and even people who possess falsities because they know no better (of whom there are very many within the Church, and also very many outside it, called gentiles), do indeed regard their falsities as truths. But since these falsities proceed from good and those people bend them towards good, there is nothing harmful about them, as there is about falsities that arise from evil. And since falsities arising from good are gentle and yielding, those people are capable of receiving truths, and do indeed receive them when given instruction by angels.” (Secrets of Heaven 9192.7)

In this story, Micah initially made a mistake in stealing his mother’s silver, but he repented of that mistake, which was good. He also showed kindness and hospitality towards the Levite, even if he could have also been in a state of intermediate goodness as he thought about the benefits the Levite could bring to himself. The situation in this story of Micah being a good person and yet having idols in his house, could represent the very common situation in our own lives in which we have ideas or ideals that bring us comfort, even if they might not be completely true, and yet we are also trying to live a good life. Micah said to the Levite, “be a father and a priest to me” (Judges 17:10). “Father” and “priest” in the Word both represent states of goodness (see AC 2803, 3704.2; AR 854). So we could imagine that the Levite represents the goodness that dwells with us, despite the false ideas that we might also have.

And then there are the Danites. The Danites were the last of the twelve tribes to receive their allotment of land in the land of Canaan (see Joshua 19:40-48), and apparently they were not satisfied with their inheritance. It appears they may have been jealous of the tribes that received larger territories, so they went searching for more land, which they found and conquered in the north. As we heard in our lessons:

“Dan’ means those who are guided by truth but not as yet by good.... The essential nature of those guided by truth but not as yet by good was also represented by the Danites who were to spy out the land in which they were to live (Judges 18). It was represented by their removal of the Levite from Micah’s house and their making off with the ephod, teraphim, and carved image.” (Secrets of Heaven 6396)

The behavior of the Danites represents our own behavior when we are guided by truth rather than goodness. We might believe we are acting righteously, but if we are not compassionate then we are not living the life of heaven. The Danites lived on the outer perimeters of Israel, which shows that when we are guided by truth over goodness, then we too live in the outer, or “the lowest parts of the Lord’s kingdom” (Secrets of Heaven 6396). Whereas Micah lived in the mountains of Ephraim, in the center of the land. And his good nature represents living in the center of heaven. The Writings also say:

“The lot to Dan did not fall among the inheritances of all the other tribes but beyond their boundaries, (Judg. 18:1). ... For those who merely affirm truth and also good, but go no further, are not within the Lord’s kingdom.... Even very wicked people may know truths and goods, and may also affirm them; but the true nature of their affirming is recognized from the life they lead.” (Secrets of Heaven 3923:9)

And even though they were members of the children of Israel, the life the Danites were leading represents the behavior we want to try to avoid.

When I read this story, I crave a happy ending for Micah. But unfortunately, that is the last we hear of him. It seems that the Danites got away with their theft, and Micah remained a victim without justice. But fortunately, the memorable relation we heard in our lessons from Heaven and Hell offers a bit of the happy ending I crave for this story.

When Swedenborg was reading this story about Micah, he witnessed a non-Christian spirit in the spiritual world who was deeply pained because of what the Danites did to Micah. This non-Christian spirit had worshipped an idol during his physical life, and so he could very easily empathize with the pain Micah must have experienced. Some nearby Christian spirits were perhaps a little bit like the Danites, in that they were prioritizing truth over goodness. They couldn't see beyond the fact that this non-Christian was an idolater and therefore a sinner. And yet the end of that story showed that the non-Christian spirit was much closer to heaven than the Christian spirits, because of the compassion that he felt for Micah. "There was a loving mercy about him and in his ignorance an innocence" (HH 324). Those are the qualities of heaven and angels. He didn't know all the truths, or get everything right in his life, but his heart was in the right place, and that allowed him to learn the truth and find his home in heaven.

I think these two stories represent a fairly typical journey that we take in our spiritual lives. We tend to start out focusing on the truth. And that's an important thing for us to do. We need to know what is right and wrong; what hurts people and what doesn't hurt people; what is selfish and what is not selfish. And we have to start to learn to make judgments about those things. The name "Dan" means "judge," and this story appears in the book of Judges. But when we start to put the truth above goodness too much in our life, then we start to become a little too judgmental in the judgments that we're making, and we can become more like the Danites at the end of this story.

And we can sometimes end up doing exactly what the Danites did, which is that we look at other people's "idols" - other people's ideas that may or may not be correct - and we say: "You shouldn't have that!" We invalidate other people's ideas. And maybe those ideas are not completely true, but maybe they also bring someone comfort, like Micah's idols brought him comfort. For example, many Christians believe that angels have wings. And that idea brings a lot of comfort to a lot of people; the image of protective wings on a guardian angel. And we know that angels don't actually have wings. But if we said to someone: "Angels don't have wings!" we could be at risk of being like the Danites, snatching away an idea that brings someone comfort.

So then, in our journey towards heaven, I think we can begin to recognize that we need to turn things around. We need to have goodness be the priority, and truth be what supports that. And that state is described by the story in Heaven and Hell of the non-Christian spirit who had compassion for Micah. It didn't matter as much that this non-Christian spirit had worshipped an idol during his physical life, what mattered was his compassion for Micah. That is what put him with the angels in heaven. That is what allowed him to eventually see the truth more clearly.

There's a saying that goes like this: "Be kind, because everyone is going through something you know nothing about." As we pass by each other on the journey of life, it can be very easy for us to make judgements about other people; what they believe, and how they behave, just as it was very easy for the Danites to steal Micah's idol. But when we do that, when we prioritize truth over goodness, we often end up becoming the very thing we're criticizing. And that's what happened with the Danites. They ended up worshipping Micah's idol. Prioritizing truth over goodness pushes us out to the outer edges of the Lord's kingdom. But prioritizing goodness, like the non-Christian spirit did, is what brings us into the center of heaven/.

I know there are times when I'm like the Danites in this story. I might look at another person's religious beliefs, or political beliefs, or cultural beliefs, and I can get into a "judge" mode, or an evaluator mode. I end up picking apart the correctness or incorrectness of other people, like the Danites ransacking Micah's home. I can end up feeling superior in my beliefs, like the Christian spirits looking down on the non-Christian spirit for being an idolater. I can end up doing and saying things that invalidate another person's point of view, which probably feels to them like I've stolen something precious from them. Maybe their idea is not completely correct, but maybe it is attached to some genuine goodness. Maybe it brought them comfort in some way. I want to try to be aware of when I do that, and try to not do that. I want to try to repent of those thefts, like Micah repented of his theft.

I think there are other times when I'm more like Micah in this story, where I have an idea that may not be totally correct, but it brings me comfort. And I hope that, when I get to the next life, just like the non-Christian spirit, I will be able to have the humility to reexamine my beliefs, and put away any of the idols or ideas that don't actually provide me with goodness and truth. I hope I can be surrounded by people with compassion, like those good spirits, who can help me to do that in a way that is not too painful. Too often, when I'm listening to someone else's pain I can end up pointing out the ways I think they could have avoided that pain, or the ways I think they are expressing their pain inappropriately, rather than just feeling their distress, and listening compassionately, like the non-Christian spirit, and the good spirits in this story. I think the Lord summed it up nicely when He said:

"Judge not, and you shall not be judged. Condemn not, and you shall not be condemned. Forgive, and you will be forgiven.... And why do you look at the speck in your brother's eye, but do not perceive the plank in your own eye? Or how can you say to your brother, 'Brother, let me remove the speck that is in your eye,' when you yourself do not see the plank that is in your own eye? Hypocrite! First remove the plank from your own eye, and then you will see clearly to remove the speck that is in your brother's eye" (Luke 6:37-42).

So, these two stories together - from Judges and Heaven and Hell - illustrate some of the different ways that we can interact with other people. There are times we can be like the Danites, prioritizing truth over goodness. We might invalidate other people's ideas, stealing their "idols," and perhaps not even care about how that might hurt them. But there are also times that we can be like the non-Christian spirit or the good spirits who look past other people's idolatry, and who act with compassion towards other people's pain. And I love thinking about that as the happy ending to the Micah story, which could be the happy ending to our story as well.

In closing I want to quote a different Micah in the Word. The prophet Micah is not the same as the Micah in Judges, but he perhaps captures a similar quality in what he said about prioritizing goodness:

"The Lord has shown you, people, what is good. And what does the Lord require of you, but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with your God?" (Micah 6:8)

New Church Challenge Board Members

President James Cole is a Registered Nurse and a Nursing Instructor, a career he got into after his son Gabriel was born in 2005 with heart disease, developmental delays, Rubinstein Taybi Syndrome, and other medical issues. He has served on the board of New Church Challenge since 2016 and as its President since February of 2019. He is married with 3 daughters and 1 son.

Roxanne Genzlinger is a new member to the New Church Challenge Board. She lives in Kempton with her husband and 3 children. Roxanne has 2 children with special needs approaching adult hood, and her passion is in vocational skills. She and her oldest son, who is intellectually disabled, have started a coffee shop with the hopes of offering job training and employment to young adults with disabilities.

Sarah Jin Wong joined the New Church Challenge Board on invitation from Kurt and Martha Asplundh. She accepted eagerly when she discovered how closely NCC's mission was aligned with her personal mission and passion for serving individuals with disabilities and their families. As a teacher educator and the College Liaison, she aspires to foster the relationship between Bryn Athyn College and its future Teachers with NCC and its Horizon Group members, as well as contribute to broader increase in accessibility and inclusivity in our community.

Gail Neukum is in her 29th year of teaching and 15th year of teaching science at Bryn Athyn Church School. At school she is dedicated to helping students who may have learning challenges. She wanted to become involved in NCC because she is also interested in helping our church take care of its adults with challenges. She shares the dream of NCC in being devoted to helping these adults be as useful, safe, comfortable and independent as possible in our world. She also helped found the Housing Grant and sits on its committee.

Clayton Walsh is an active community member and works at The Lord's New Church, as well as for the Borough of Bryn Athyn. Clayton also enjoys his time helping fundraise as President of Charity in Action, a Bryn Athyn-based non-profit that helps people. He also loves helping out at the Bryn Athyn Thrift Shop. He is married to his lovely wife Jolene, with 3 kids Aaliya Gunther lives in Oak Arbor, Michigan with her husband Rev. Steven Gunther and her four children. She has a master's in special education from Bryn Athyn College, focusing on the factors that affect the identification of and support for dyslexia in elementary students. She is passionate about inclusionary special education practices and advocating for systems that can support all students, including those with undiagnosed learning differences. She hopes to use her training and expertise to support the development of more comprehensive support for students with diverse needs in New Church schools.

Nina Kline is the editor of our newsletter and chairman of the Family Grants Committee. She became interested in the work of New Church Challenge from her love of her niece, Anne Warley, and was happy to take on The Challenger when invited to do so by Donette Alfeldt.

Sig Soneson worked for the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania for 34 years retiring in 2011. He worked in a mental hospital and for the Office of Vocational Rehabilitation where he helped people with disabilities explore their vocational options. A few years after retiring he joined the Board of New Church Challenge hoping to bring his work experience to help New Church members who are living with challenges.

Bob Fazio joined New Church Challenge to offer his skills as a builder toward the realisation of our dream of a home for challenged people in Bryn Athyn. While that dream is still illusive, he has found other activities in which to serve, including the Thanksgiving food drive.

Wystan Simons has six children with her husband Edward Simons (and three grandkids!), of which Owen is the last at home. They are a family of artists and craftsmen, who love to sing together. Wystan herself is an aspiring playwright and writer of screenplays. She loves to help challenged people find their voices.

Leona Fritch has more than 24 years experience as a special Education teacher and teacher in the Kempton New Church School, where she is currently overseeing the fledgling Special Ed program NCC is supporting. She has had an interest in getting state services for children enrolled in private schools and for teaching reading to children with dyslexia.

What can we say about Phil Schnarr? He has served the NCC Board for so many years, as Vice President and Interim President as well as bringing us quotes from the Word to start meetings, serving on many different committees and writing for the newsletter. He developed the plan for a Housing Grant, drawing from his own family's experience modifying their home. He is retiring this year to move out west to be near his children and grandchildren and become a farmer, after years as a "fisher of men." We will miss him.

In addition to these Members of the Board, we have two "Officers of the Board:"

Les Alden is our treasurer. In his professional manner he keeps us all apprised of the finances and the various funds we have, as well as contributions and dues. We would be lost without him.

Jennifer Cole joined us a few years ago as temporary secretary and stayed, to our benefit. She takes minutes as well as serving as administrative assistant, sending out meeting announcements and thank you letters. She says "I enjoy hearing about the hard work the board is doing to support special needs folks, including my grandson Gabriel."

Report of the Nominating Committee

Sig Soneson

The Nominating Committee, Sig Soneson, Gail Neukum and Jennifer Cole offers the slate of nominees for the Board:

James Cole, incumbent

Sarah Wong, incumbent

Nina Kline, incumbent

Rev. Glenn "Mac" Frazier, Pastor of the Washington DC New Church

A vote will be taken at the annual Meeting on May 3.

Nominee for the Board

Rev. Glenn "Mac" Frazier is the pastor of the Washington New Church in Mitchellville, Maryland, and the father of a special needs child. Before serving in Maryland, he has been an Assistant Pastor in Bryn Athyn, PA, and Glenview, IL, was the founding Pastor of New Way Church in Austin, TX, and was a founding partner and vice president at Refinery, Inc., a web development and business consulting firm.

Invitation

from Wystan Simons

Real Voices of Philadelphia invites you to watch "SPELLERS the MOVIE" at MPAC April 30th, at 7pm. It tells the story of a group of non-speaking individuals who type and spell to communicate. There are members of the New Church who are non-speaking individuals who are spellers and typers. It is valuable that we support all those who communicate through spelling, so that there are more and more people who recognize the validity of this communication method.

In the professional world, intelligence continues to be evaluated based on movement. Those who cannot indicate physically what they want to indicate are evaluated as having no intellectual capacity. This movie also talks about how that assumption is incorrect. Those interested can order tickets via Kinema, $20 per family, at this address: <https://kinema.com/events/spellers-gumxbu>

Pancake Breakfast

How about some pancakes on April 15 between 8:00 and 10:00 am? New Church Challenge will be holding our annual fundraiser The Pancake Breakfast at Heilman Hall in Bryn Athyn. Come for a delicious breakfast to support our Horizon Group and other NCC uses. Bring your grandkids! Price is $10 for an adult, $5 for a child, $25 for a family.

What's Inside

This issue has information about the Annual Meeting and a report from the Nominating Committee. We also feature thumbnail sketches of all the current members of the board with small pictures including the potential new member. And look for a full color invitation to the annual Pancake Breakfast!

We are happy to bring you a thoughtful sermon about compassion of those who are not perfect by Rev. Solomon Keal. Do I think our members need instruction about compassion? Of course not! People who live with or care about challenged people practice compassion all the time. I bring it to you for the beauty of Solomon's thought integrating the Old Testament with the Heavenly Doctrines. The Lord is present in all compassion.

We are entering the modern age! For years we have toyed with the idea of offering this newsletter electronically. You will still receive a paper copy, but as an experiment this issue will also be on our website, newchurchchallenge.com. Your comments are welcome!
